Effect of servant leadership on the performance of a regional general hospital

Currently, leadership becomes the concern of studies in public organizations. However, studies on servant leadership and its impact on hospital performance are still limited. This study aims to identify the relationship and impact of servant leadership on organizational performance (hospital). A quantitative approach was used on a sample of 729 healthcare workers at the Undara Regional General Hospital in Falm. The sampling was based on the Slovin formula with an error rate of 5%, thus providing a better understanding of the relationship between servant leadership and hospital performance.
